The top-selling EV will also get a new trim and a new battery pack, which will increase its driving range by 13 percent (or about 37 miles). The Leaf’s build is smoother and simpler, and it will roll out two new trims of its own, with the slow-selling S and the “Ikari” concept shown here. Nissan is planning to sell an estimated 30,000 units worldwide of the 2018 Leaf, which is already nearly three years old, but the new powertrain is what stands out most. There’s no word on what that will be, but a well-placed source tells us it should be relatively cheap, and hence more attractive to consumers who often trade up to larger and more powerful EVs. The Leaf will be available in three flavors, starting at $37,155.

Here’s a look at the full lineup: Gallery: New Leaf Trims: Electric Car Stylized as Electric Vehicle (EV) cars, Nissan Leaf is the
