The interaction between V. cholerae O1 biotype and V. cholerae O1 antigenic loci on phage CT10 was studied. Six clones were obtained by in vitro transformation of Escherichia coli P15 cells with a V. cholerae O1 biotype bacteriophage isolated from traditional cholera patients. Phage CT10 was randomly inserted into the genome of five clones producing phage CT10 variants bearing different lipopolysaccharide (LPS) and O1 antigenic loci. Two clones had phage CT10 isolated from the LPS O1a (Biotype 2) variant; both clones were positive for the O1a serological and biotyping characters and could be categorized into LPS O1a (Biotype 2) clones. The three other clones produced phage CT10 inserted into LPS O1a biotype loci. The LPS O1a (Biotype 1) in all three clones was the same as that in the genome of the parent phage CT10. The LPS O1a (Biotype 3) and O1a (Biotype 5) in one of the three clones was identical to that in the genome of the parent phage CT10; the LPS O1
