A round of applause for Camera 360 from 360 Camera & Film! This week, Quinnipiac has been testing the water, putting out two questionnaires — one to the media and one to the public. I had hoped, after I submitted my questionnaire to the state of Connecticut, that Quinnipiac would find out some of the truths in the media that I told them in my questionnaire. However, all the questions I provided on this topic were related to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the Quinnipiac pollsters did not ask questions about the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. That is not to say that they didn't care about the truth, but that they were only concerned with the truth of the Massachusetts constituents of their director of poll testing. Most of the questions they wanted to ask about the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were answers to the question of when the Commonwealth and the state of Connecticut should secede.

I brought these for my Canon DSLR to see the difference between the two Nikon lenses, to see what each one could do to a flower. Canon vs. Nikon Canon vs. Nikon are two big brands of cameras, as well as lenses. They are both very well known. I bought a Canon camera to see how the 14-24 (in this case) fisheye from this brand compared with the Nikon 14-24 fisheye. In this video, I compare the results of each lens. Let me explain the conclusion: Canon vs. Nikon 14-24 fisheye comparison: Both lenses are effective. They both offer the same performance, but with different focal lengths. These are my conclusions on the comparison between the two fisheye lenses: 14-24 fisheye lens comparison: I like the Nikon lens more. There is slightly better light management. I bought the Canon lens with the intention of photographing close up objects, like insects, so the resulting image will be good for printing. 14-24 fisheye lens conclusion: The Nikon lens is better for shooting close up subjects and good for flower photography. It will be more effective to use it for macro photography and less effective to use it for wide angle photography. 14-24 fisheye lens for flower photography: I recommend the Nikon 14-24 fisheye lens for flower photography. The resolution of the lens is much better than the Canon 14
