I'm a c++ newbie, this question might sound silly but I'd really like to have a clean way of declaring such array. I've searched already but can't find any info. A: No, you cannot declare such an array inside a class. A possible work around is to declare a global constant array and have the class constructor initialize it. For example, class Foo { public: Foo(const int arr[4]) { // use arr } }; const int arr[] = {1, 2, 3, 4}; int main() { Foo foo(arr); } In this case, you would have to make sure that the data is initialized, otherwise the class could access a "random" state of the program. Alternatively, you can use static constexpr arrays to declare static arrays. Note that this is intended for compile-time constants, not run-time constants. For example: class Foo { public: Foo() { static constexpr int arr[] = {1, 2, 3, 4}; // use arr } }; int main() { Foo foo; } Colombo, Sri Lanka - Nethil Madushan is just one of 3e33713323
