Britain's Foreign Secretary William Hague is seen outside St James's Palace in London on Tuesday. The UK is in dire need of more and better alternative energy sources, he said. As Britain's government seeks ways to reduce carbon emissions, a report has warned that natural gas could be a more cost-effective source of energy over the coming decades than renewable sources. In a new report, which looks at public subsidies provided by the UK government between 2012 and 2018, House of Lords Economic Affairs Committee said that the government had made a "lacklustre effort" in supporting natural gas research, while at the same time offering substantial subsidies to wind and solar power. "The UK is currently in dire need of more and better alternative energy sources," said William Hague, foreign secretary, in a statement. "As the world's sixth-largest producer of shale gas, it is able to achieve real change, but we could be doing even more to harness this cheap, clean and versatile source of fuel and ensure that investment goes where it will be used." The government report said the government spent 2.1 billion pounds ($3.2 billion) between 2012 and 2018 on renewables, compared with 1.9 billion pounds ($2.9 billion) spent on nuclear power. In total, the UK spent 4.7 billion pounds ($7.4 billion) from 2012 to 2018 on low-carbon power generation, while the report said that research into natural gas increased six-fold during that period, with particular growth being in "road-ready" synthetic natural gas. The House of Lords committee urged the government to increase support for the natural gas sector and add it to its six-year roadmap, which also includes an emphasis on fuel cells and carbon capture and storage. "If the UK is to deliver on its commitments under the Paris Agreement and secure a low-carbon future, it must become a world-leading exporter of natural gas and refocus investment and research e24f408de9
