Across the United States, high school students who use the Internet are becoming more likely to use the World Wide Web for research. While e-research has the potential to raise students' critical-thinking and writing abilities, it can also pose a challenge to educators and parents. For instance, educators can end up with content that is intended to aid students' research and not research intended to aid students' learning. The 'Ethics Beyond High School - Academic Ethics and Internet Use' e-learning module is designed to help students develop academic writing skills by using the Internet. The program is comprised of 30 short, interactive, video lectures. It covers many of the skills required of today's students and helps them to become more aware of the ethical issues surrounding the use of e-research. Participants are led through the process of researching an assigned topic and using the information they find online to support their work. They can then compile an academic essay containing the skills they learned during the process. Features: Learning videos (30-minute videos) that guide students through the process of using the Internet to write an academic essay. Teaching strategies to help students understand the difference between online research and legitimate research. A variety of teaching techniques to support students in finding the information they need. Check out the High School Review Library for additional e-learning resources from the American Council on Education, College Board and National Association of Secondary School Principals. www.buysays.org - Stable&Reliable English Essay Writing Service.
