Share Russia Says Losing Control of Electronic Waste share Russia's President Vladimir Putin on March 20 signed a new law that increases taxes on electronic waste in a move aimed at expanding the recycling and cleanup of the country's mountains of electronic waste. Vladimir Putin said at the time that "we want Russia to be the global leader in the most efficiently recycling of electronic waste." The tax will see fees for bringing in electronic waste to be collected at port facilities. Additional fees for paper, wood and plastic waste will be collected at borders with third countries. After this increase the tax on electronic waste will be the same as the value placed on recyclable plastic, which is currently set at 20 rubles ($0.65) per kilogram. Volunteers pour electronic waste into a vat at a recycling center in Tuzla, Bosnia, Oct. 9, 2013. Tsvetana Piskareva, director of the Russian Electronic Waste Agency, says that the country's recycling rate is 42 percent. That is well below the 95 percent target set by the EU and the United States, although since the start of the current fiscal year those rates have risen slightly. The reason behind the fall in the rate is that 90 percent of the country's electronic waste is collected by the city and

This is strong evidence that good compensation plans are a real competitive advantage, and a great driver of employee engagement. The survey also found that increased flexibility in regards to telecommuting, working from home and part-time hours are big draw factors to employers in the U.S. That's not surprising. Research has shown that part-time workers are 26 percent less likely to quit their jobs than full-time workers, and telecommuters are 33 percent less likely to quit their jobs than workers who must commute to work. Three Types of Compensation Compensation plans fall into three categories: base pay, performance pay and incentive pay. Each of the three types of compensation has the potential to increase engagement, but base pay is the most crucial. This includes base pay, target compensation, holiday pay and bonuses. Target Compensation is Salary PLUS Bonus + Total Compensation Often referred to as "perk pay," or "incentive pay," this type of compensation can be shared with the employee, not just rewarded, and can be designed to
