Investigation of attention bias to affective threat cues: The main effect of perceived social costs on attentional bias. The current study examined the effect of perceived social costs (i.e. emotional and functional costs) on attention bias to affective threat cues. In a community sample of 159 undergraduate students, we found an overall attention bias for affective stimuli. More importantly, perceived social costs were positively associated with attentional bias for affective cues. These findings suggest that perceived social costs might not only affect how we process information, but also how we orient our attention toward social stimuli. Theoretical and clinical implications of these findings are discussed.Q: Python 2.7 html document object not parsing htmlentities() I'm trying to parse an html document with DOM using python. titles = html_doc.body.text This works but not titles = html_doc.body.text.encode("utf-8") If I do titles = urllib.request.urlopen("").decode("utf-8") It returns the same html. I've tried json and xhtml but none of those are able to decode the htmlentities(). Is there another way to parse and decode html from a text document? A: You should actually read the whole file, no need to decode first, as it's already decoded. If the file ends with a BOM, it's already decoded (unless you try to read it in Python 2). A: In Python, bytes are not text, but bytes. If you look at the documentation for the bytes class, there is a ton of info about it. The good news is, if you pass a string or bytes object that does not start with a BOM to the encode method (somewhat surprisingly) it will not perform any code page conversions: >>> foo = b'abc' >>> print(foo.encode('UTF-8')) abc However, you still need to be careful about how you interact with bytes objects. When you are parsing, this means that you need to convert bytes into text-safe strings with unicode rather than strings: >>> foo = 'abc' >>> print(foo) abc >>> print(unicode(foo)) abc Because bytes

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.0)?

That could be bad news if you're planning to stop by the local No Man's Sky Frontier this weekend. You may recall that we predicted that Thursday, July 27 and Friday, July 28 (the weekend) would see a mad house of players in the No Man's Sky galaxy. Things aren't going to be quite as hectic as that. The No Man's Sky subreddit has created a countdown and updated when it will reach 0. It's likely that we'll reach that zero when No Man's Sky goes live on Steam July 29. But people at Penny Arcade Expo are reporting that the 'release' is already live. According to the Penny Arcade forum, you can now use interstellar portals to travel all over No Man's Sky. The 'portals', which the Penny Arcade report surmised were a much-needed update, came with some bugs, so it might be wise to test them out before spending hours gazing at the stars.[A cesarean section for fetal macrosomia with portal hypertension]. On 26th of April, 1980, a 38-year-old woman was admitted to the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology of the Osaka Red Cross Hospital because of a high rupture rate of the uterus (more than 1000 per 100,000 deliveries). She was clinically diagnosed as having polyhydramnios and was found to have a fetal abdominal circumference of more than 50 cm and an enlargement of the liver. On the 29th of April, she was delivered of a 2,200 g, 33-week-old, male fetus. The placenta and umbilical cord were detached from the cervix. The mother did not receive any sedative or analgesic therapy, and the labor was induced. Postoperatively, she was given a combination of MgSO4, dopamine hydrochloride and MgO. On the 10th of May, she was discharged and returned to her home. One month after the delivery, a second cesarean section was performed. At that time, a stillborn of 2,350 g was delivered. The anesthetic management was successful, and no complications occurred. The clinical course after the operation for fetal macrosomia with portal hypertension is presented.Virginia Tech is on the verge of seeing one of its biggest rivals in the Big 12 enter
