Kaepernick, for his part, seems to take the backhanded compliment in stride. “Yeah, that’s their opinion,” he said of Johnson and Elway after the Dolphins’ 24-20 win over the Broncos on Monday night. “But I just want to focus on what I’m doing on the field and not really pay attention to all that.” Kaepernick, in fact, may have already found a sympathetic listening ear. The obvious players’ union leader, retired linebacker Ray Lewis, has already discussed the issue with Kaepernick. “I have reached out to Colin,” Lewis told ESPN’s Josina Anderson and Adam Schefter on Monday. “They’ve actually reached out to me. The idea is to have a login button and a chat window. When clicked on login, then the user must be redirected to a URL. I have defined my callback function as $("#Login").click(function() { $.ajax({ url: "/login.php", success: function(data) { $("#msg").html("Message Sent"); }, }); }); I want to send the user to the above URL after the message is sent. I know that I can do this by following the above code. My question is can I send the user to a URL and still access the chat window while the session is active? A: I would set your own cookie, when a user successfully logs in: $("#Login").click(function() { $.ajax({ url: "/login.php", success: function(data) { $("#msg").html("Message Sent"); }, beforeSend: function(xhr) { xhr.setRequestHeader("Cookie", "loggedIn=true;path=/chat"); }, }); });
