Airdrie, Western Australia Airdrie is a suburb of Perth, Western Australia. It is located 14 kilometres north-east of the centre of Perth and 6 kilometres north of Warwick. Its local government area is the City of Armadale. History At the 2016 census, Airdrie had a population of 3,354, with a median age of 50 and 59.8% of residents were born in Australia. Airdrie was established in 1949 when the new Airdrie Senior High School and the St. Clair Hill Infants School opened. The suburb was named after Fraserburgh in Scotland, after Lord Fraserburgh Park was being cleared for a housing subdivision by the Midland Railway Co. of Western Australia. 1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to band-pass filters, and in particular to those band-pass filters that provide a continuous tuning range.
2. Description of Related Art Most existing band-pass filters are discrete components employing complicated materials and structures. As a result of their complicated structures, the conventional band-pass filters are rather bulky in structure and difficult to fabricate. Optical communication systems require band-pass filters with high selectivity and stability. These two characteristics can be achieved by the conventional band-pass filters. For example, conventional cascaded band-pass filters have stable selectivity and at the same time they can provide continuous tuning range by using different materials and structures. Conventional cascaded band-pass filters are divided into two categories, namely coupling band-pass filters and resettable band-pass filters. In coupling band-pass filters, the centre wavelength does not shift throughout the tuning range. However, coupler band-pass filters are not appropriate for the application of optical communication systems because they have wide bandwidths, which means that their bandwidths are limited in the optical communication systems. In particular, for the tunable filters at the centre wavelength wavelength position, the bandwidths for the respective filter elements must be less than the optical communications system. Therefore, reset d0c515b9f4

Vascular disruption with a solid pneumatic microtome for extracapsular dissection of benign prostatic hyperplasia: initial experience. To describe a novel surgical technique for simple prostatectomy using a solid pneumatic microtome and to evaluate the efficacy and safety of the novel technique. The study population included all patients who underwent open radical prostatectomy using the solid pneumatic microtome at the authors' hospital. Follow-up was obtained by patient visit, phone call, and email. The primary outcome measure was a comparison of complication rates between patients who underwent simple prostatectomy using the solid pneumatic microtome and those who underwent simple prostatectomy with the aid of a razor. From June 2004 to January 2007, 95 patients underwent open radical prostatectomy using the solid pneumatic microtome. The mean patient age was 64 years (range, 48-76 years) and mean prostate weight was 49 g (range, 15-120 g). The rate of conversion to open simple prostatectomy was 3.2%. The mean length of catheterization was 11 days (range, 4-20 days), the mean length of hospital stay was 1.4 days (range, 1-4 days), and the mean follow-up duration was 22 months (range, 3-36 months). Although the authors did not observe any cases of rectal injury in the subset of 17 patients undergoing the
