Sensory desensitization: training at the feet of the chimes. It has been postulated that instruments such as bells or electronic beeps of varying pitches, similar to transducer frequency, can be used to desensitize cholesteatoma patients. The aim of this prospective study is to evaluate the efficacy of sensory training at the feet of the chimes. We included 19 ears (11 patients) with different stages of chronic otitis media and 7 ears (4 patients) of normal ears for comparison. The mean age of the patients (10 females, 9 males) was 55.7±8.8 years, and the mean duration of cholesteatoma was  $6.4\pm3.5$  years. All patients had severe to moderately severe hearing loss (up to 70 dB) of the affected side. Patients were trained in a quiet outpatient's clinic. Sound pressure threshold was obtained with the Röschl GmbH (Pheider's eyecoupler) at 4 locations; four standard audiometric test frequencies; in the apical part of the affected ear and in the unaffected ear. Clinical data (i.e. hearing improvement, otorrhea, pain, and tinnitus) were recorded at each audiometric test. Baseline in this study consists of the mean threshold of the last audiometric test conducted before the start of this study. After 3 months of training, mean thresholds at the four locations were reduced by 12 dB in the affected ear and by 6 dB in the unaffected ear. Only 3 of 19 affected ears showed a hearing improvement of greater than 10 dB. No significant difference in improvement of hearing was found between patients with otalgia and those without otalgia. Although in our study sensory desensitization was not found to be effective in treating our patients, the patients of this study might be different in a natural history and in a treatment outcome from a larger number of patients. In contrast to other studies of harmful algal blooms, our work addresses the impact of

In arguing against the use of this testimony, appellant argues that it was not impeaching and that the State offered it as substantive evidence. The decision to allow the testimony, therefore, was reviewed under Rule 403 of the Rules of Evidence. See Tex. R. Evid. 403. Before allowing the testimony, the trial court found that it was not relevant to any fact or issue in the case. Relevant evidence is that which has any tendency to make the existence of a fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Tex. R. Evid. 401. Relevant evidence, however, may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. Tex. R. Evid. 403. When the trial court makes this determination, we review the decision for an abuse of discretion. See Mozon v. State, 991 S.W.2d 841, 847 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999). This Court, in Dyson v. State, 672 S.W.2d 460, 463 (Tex. Crim. App. 1984), held that an extraneous offense may be used to show the intent or motive of the defendant. Here, the extraneous offense was properly admitted to establish the intent or motive of the appellant, since appellant was being prosecuted for his role in the robbery. Given that the robbery was at the same location, day, and time as the attempted murder, it is not unreasonable to believe that appellant would have attempted to kill the robbers if he was the only one in the store. The trial court could have reasonable
