"We wanted to do this because we wanted to do right by these young men," Northwestern coach Pat Fitzgerald said in a telephone interview with The Almanac on Tuesday. "We want to make sure the kids understand that Northwestern is a place where they can compete and play and improve, and we want them to come in here and play at a high level." Fitzgerald said the new recruiting process will be the first time in his career that a player would have multiple visits on his calendar. In this case, the players will attend two meetings with the coaching staff at the end of each November and the start of December. The late-November visits are to remain a highlight of the player's entire recruiting process. "We want this to be a place that the players view as a place they can show off their skills, as well as a place where we can get to know them as people," Fitzgerald said. "There are some kids who we evaluate, and they're not the best fit for this program, but this is a school for them. But then there are some kids who are really high in the rankings, and we think we can help them and help them get to another level. That's what this is all about. "We want to be a program for everybody, and so I think we need to do the work with these guys." The
