Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for forming a non-crystalline thin-film using a microwave plasma CVD apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art Thin-film transistors which are used in liquid crystal displays (LCDs) have been widely used, and thin-film transistors which use polycrystalline silicon are more widely used than those which use amorphous silicon. A polycrystalline thin-film transistor is formed by crystallizing the amorphous thin-film by laser irradiation or the like. In the laser irradiation technique, the heating process is so long that a process cost is high. Moreover, the energy is wasted in the heating process, and it is difficult to form a uniformly crystallized thin-film. Moreover, a technique in which an amorphous silicon is crystallized by applying a high-frequency electric field to the amorphous silicon is recently developed. This technique can shorten a heating time, and can provide a uniformly crystallized film without wasting energy. A thin-film transistor is formed using such a crystallized polycrystalline silicon, and
