"I had many technical conversations in English, and I could not express myself well enough," said Koto, who grew up in Kinshasa and now lives in Vancouver. "It was the same story for all my fellow students." We apologize, but this video has failed to load. tap here to see other videos from our team. Try refreshing your browser, or 'Same story for all my fellow students': Congolese engineer Paul Koto's English was not good enough to get a job Back to video Koto enrolled in the English-French concord program at the university, where he had no problem progressing in French, and he has since completed a master's degree in business. Because he was unable to apply for a job in Canada, Koto found work instead in the country of his birth, where the salary is lower and the language is more difficult. But, he said, what's important is that he can work. "I am happy that I could contribute to the economy of my country, and also I can get a job that I would never be able to get in my own country," Koto said. "It's a win-win situation."This is the 3rd year of a 5-year R13 grant which will enable investigators to address the following four topics pertaining to the pathogenesis of HIV-1 infection and AIDS: (1) construction of targeted gene inactivation technology (TIGIT); (2) its transfer to other model systems; (3) its demonstration in HIV-1 infection and AIDS; and (4)
