Storyline Summary

Three pieces of information were left when the fate of the Lands Between was sealed. The departure of the hero is still yet to be seen. The trails of the hero's battle still remain. What perilous adventure will await them?

...Enter the lands between!

At the present time, even if the cosmic light that shone before the night ended with a flood of seawater, the primal forest that covered the Fields was still intact. Yet as the black waters dispersed and the light neared the dawn of the new day, the perverted concrete which scarred the sea in all directions appeared yet again. It was then that a man clad in a dark-red dress reached out from one of the spires and appeared by the side of the primal forest. In front of the man stood a modern vehicle.

"There is no point in standing here!...Wretched fools who are a disgrace to the Elden Ring!" A seemingly familiar voice rang out from the peeling and peeling of the primitive horn. "I can't stand this any longer! I don't have time to listen to the conversation of @gamejolt ██████████ Good game. Readless and confusing at first, but the only way to really get into it. The game has a lot of longevity. It would make for a good long term investment. BTG22 ██████████ Though the menus do take some time to learn, there's a lot of content for all the newcomers out there. Immerse yourself for 60 hours and see where it takes you. dk90 ██████████ This game has some seriously awesomeness going on. I couldn't put it down. Game mechanics are smart. I finally found a fun system that works for me. 5\5 ██████████ The book looked good and the intro to the game flowed well, but once you get started you'll be in a perpetual grind. It's probably worth your time for the first 100 hours.

Zignature  I think this would be a great game to play if you aren't a fan of long story-driven games, because it's short and to the point. There are some great game mechanics and the voice acting is fantastic.
Altered_Seeds  If you're looking for an action JRPG or a more mature RPG, this might be for you. There's a very specific setup that you'll have to get use to, so be prepared to spend a lot of time figuring it out.
Top of the hunt  The basic one, one with the highest rating, it is rare, but it does exist!

■ Story • The Story of the Lands Between: For the first time in history, the Kingdoms of the Lands Between, separated by mountains and forests, were unified by the Elden Ring. As peace and harmony was established, an era of prosperity and stability prevailed. • Then a tragic incident occurred. • An Elden Lord ascended to power and began a war with the neighboring kingdoms and brought about a great calamity. The Lands Between was divided into two realms: the continent of Shandris and the island-continent of Bohra. Shandris was an Elden land. While Bohra was ruled by a tyrant who defiled the land. Across this land dividing the two realms, an Elden Lord ascends to power, causing war with the neighboring kingdoms. • The story of Shandris and Bohra has now been set in motion. There is a reason why the war has been raging since then. And, the Elden Lord who reigns over the world is the main character of the story, and the player character. What is the world we live in? The Lands Between is a place where the dream of the Elden Lords has come true. ■ The Game System Story: Survive combat, gather the gathered forces. Play style: A role-playing game where you can freely set the characteristics of your player character. Style of Play: A generic action RPG with a combat system. Sword/Magic: Two at your disposal! Quest: A continuous story in which you gather the gathered forces. Characters: Customizable characters! ■ Equipment TEN AMULET: 10 axes, 10 steel swords, 10 grenades, 10 rock knives, 10 shields, ten armor, 10 magic, 10 distinct fighting combos. You can freely combine the weapons, armor, and magic. ■ How to Play: Strategy Quick: Perform a specific attack on your opponent. Grip: Perform a special attack as an evasion technique. Q: Find duplicates then combine elements from pairs in list of lists I am trying to write a function that will allow me to duplicate an element that appears more than once in a list of lists and combine the elements from pairs of the list. This is what I have so far:

import numpy as np
def duplicate_list(list_of_lists):
    dup_list = []
    for i in range(len(list_of_lists)):
        for j in range(i+1, len(list_of_lists)):
            if list_of_lists[i] == list_of_lists[j]:
                print("duplicate!")
                dup_list.append(list_of_lists[i] + list_of_lists[j])
    return list(dup_list)

And the type of output I am expecting from this function is that I have a list of lists that looks like the following:

>>> my_list [[0, 0, 0], [0, 0, 1], [0, 1, 0], [1, 0, 0]]
>>> duplicate_list(my_list) [0, 0, 0, 0, 0]

And here's the output that I get from running the above code:

>>> duplicate_list(my_list) >>> [[0, 0, 1], [0, 1, 0], [1, 0, 0]]

What I want to do is make my function loop over each element in the list of lists, and see if

Search form News My city's lighting policy could be too low for a city the size of Seattle In Seattle, "I'm not doing it," was a common refrain at debates on sidewalk use-of-light in Capri Village in 2015. While the city says complaints "drive the majority" of initiatives requiring a vote, the reasons provided in our questionnaires just didn't seem to convince residents. Katie Falkenberg Environment Seattle On April 9th, the Seattle City Council unanimously passed its first street use-of-light ordinance, designed to spread the cost of illuminating sidewalk spaces (rather than counting on the properties and occupants to shoulder that burden) and to provide a consistent standard for all sidewalks in the city. With respect to the latter goal, the ordinance is a remarkable achievement, given the enormous variance of sidewalk illumination between neighborhoods. It sets a minimum and maximum for each property, depending on the lot size, height of wall, and scale of architecture. It may seem unfair that a single sidewalk in a certain part of the city is going to get more light than this, while an adjacent sidewalk continues to rely on private homes to pay for it. But in the end, the city's saying, "No one sidewalk is more important than others." Seeking to address concerns that these changes would drive up property values, the ordinance includes a 6 percent annual adjustment. This is similar to the experience in my city, Indianapolis. Pending changes are expected to double property values in the most affected Seattle neighborhoods. Though no one has actually priced the impact, the city of Seattle is confident that neighboring residents will pay for the costs of sidewalk lighting, providing assistance to the backyards of Capri Village and Zillow's most recent neighborhood. The effectiveness of the ordinance is supported by the observation that some local businesses are hosting sidewalk movie nights with the support of the neighborhood association and involved residents. As for the minimum illumination? A similar strip of darkness of 13 percent is still available in Seattle if you get your permits in "I'm not doing it" fashion. (It's been observed that such strings of
