-> Source For those who are dying for Elden Ring 2 to be released this year, prepare for disappointment. As part of its latest developer's conference, developer Asobimo shared an image with no gameplay. It also stated the release date as 2nd half 2018 in Asia. The image showed that the only thing it showed was a character wearing old-style folk clothes. The conference was held in China and the screenshot is actually from Singapore. The old-style folk clothes are a reference to the production of the game. It will be released in 2nd half 2018 in Asia and is being developed by Bandai Namco subsidiary The Asobamo Studios. Stated by the image, the upcoming game is a sequel to the first game that released a few months back, 2017. The game will focus on a new story of the world map that combines the graphical style of the first game. Stay tuned to GosuxNews for more on this!
