s and Cisco Technologies Merging to Bring the Future of Client Service Cognizant will control technology from Cisco solutions to build new user experiences through a synergy of services, platforms and direct initiatives designed to provide enterprises with the best client service they have ever received. Cognizant is a global information-technology services firm whose employees and customers have been tapped more than 40 times for special assignments in the U.S. and abroad. The company's clients include some of the world's most admired brands: Procter & Gamble, Nestlé, Pfizer, Merrill Lynch, Alaska Airlines, Hilton Hotels, Sony and, most visibly, AT&T. Today, C. Dean Armstrong, chief executive of Cognizant, said the company's growing expertise in the application of sophisticated technologies like big data will help it lead clients in delivering the right client experience at the right time. "We are amplifying out professional, consulting, business and relationship and customer service," said Armstrong, who is due to present a keynote address Monday at the opening of the IDC AI & Analytics for Sales and Service conference here. "If you are at the table, the odds of getting heard is significantly higher." Armstrong said the combination of digitized customer engagement systems, smart manufacturing systems and cloud-enabled connectivity provides comprehensive "360-degree" analytics and customer experience. Today, the major challenge in service is having the global talent and capability to deliver the services and support the customer for the market, whether the issue is health care, oil and gas, banking or packaged goods, he said. "In the future, mobile will bring the world to the you," Armstrong said. "Today, mobile enables people to improve their personal brand through social media and productivity tools. In the future, there will be a transition to conversational AI, which will be conversational because it will be natural, and the personal experience will be enhanced with chat, voice and video." He added that while mobile has "revolutionized internal communications," there will be a transition to "digitized personal and professional experiences over a converged network." A Real-Time Data Revolution Cognizant may try to leverage telecom networks for customer engagement. But connecting the dots across the enterprise is not so simple, according to Greg Davis, an analyst at Gartner.
