GIMP The open source graphics program called GIMP () is often used instead of Photoshop. Its name stands for GNU Image Manipulation Program, which is its free-of-charge nature. The GIMP offers some of Photoshop's features, but it also has advantages of its own. For example, it can be used to create simple vector graphics as well as raster images. The GIMP supports multi-layer editing and offers many other features that Photoshop does not. While it has its own tutorials, there are many tutorials online that focus on the basics of using GIMP. A cistern for use in a vacuum cleaner is disclosed by Gellert in U.S. Pat. No. 1,588,049. The Gellert cistern is formed of three separate adjacent curved parts which are connected by angular elbows and a bottom. A wall is provided by injection molding plastic material into the space between the separate parts. In U.S. Pat. No. 3,068,559, it is also disclosed to make a vacuum cleaner cistern from two curved parts connected by joints, and a bottom wall. The periphery of the parts is enclosed by a four sided cover. The vacuum cleaner disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,848,713 includes a base adapted to be placed on a horizontal surface, and a wall adapted to form a vacuum cleaner's reservoir. The reservoir is formed of two separate parts, together with an internal connection joining them, the parts being molded from a synthetic resin. U.S. Pat. No. 3,815,078 describes a vacuum cleaner having a body which can be attached to a rigid suction pipe at the distal end of the pipe. The body consists of a bowl-shaped inlet with an intake aperture, and a concave-shaped receptacle. The receptacle is formed of two separate halves, each of which is molded from a rigid thermosetting synthetic resin. A flexible connection member extends between the two halves. U.S. Pat. No. 2,205,112 describes a container for a receptacle which is removably mountable on a vacuum cleaner. The container includes a housing having a concave-shaped recess for receiving the bottom of the receptacle, and upper and lower walls for retaining the receptacle. The walls are molded from a rigid thermosetting synthetic resin. Michigan Crunch The Michigan Crunch were a professional arena football team based in Ann Arbor, Michigan. They were a member of the American Professional Football League. The Crunch were founded in 2007 as a member of af2 as the Michigan Wolverines. The team was led by former Michigan All-American and three-time Big Ten Championship winning coach, Bill McCartney. McCartney's philosophy was to run the ball, use lots of short passes, and minimize the negative plays. The team was coached by long-time Wolverine assistant and the only Michigan coach with 100 wins in a row, Chuck Stobart, and his son Dan Stobart. Their home games
