STORY Lands Between A New World A mythology centered on the story of Tarnish and Loghari, the leaders of Elden Ring, has been built in the Lands Between, where man, beast, and monster live together. The People on the Islands Abnormal Creatures The many strange creatures who live on the islands of the Lands Between, which only exist in a clear blue sky and beneath a bright blue sky are called ancillary. And that may be the reason for their unnaturally fast growth and breeding. Adventurer's Guilds A Famed Port Town Even a port city like Ravnica City, the hero town, is a haven for many adventurers. Here, magic and monsters meet, and the adventurers who come here to the Famed Port Town have memories of various adventures. The Lands Between Open Fields Beyond the Famed Port Town, which is a type of open field in the Lands Between, lie vast open fields with grass, trees, and strange monsters. It is a land where open fields hide dangerous traps, and in which there is a place for growth. One Step at a Time The Town The hero town, Ravnica City, where the dungeons are said to be infested with monsters. All the shops, taverns, and inns are also closed. From the heroic adventurers whose weapons and armor shine, the smell of sweat, to the merchants who roam the town, they have a monotonous routine. They work to be idle. There are many adventurers who have received calls from travel companions and then go far from home in order to gain a lot of money in a short amount of time. Some come from far away in search of adventure, but they cannot even reach the hero town. Barbarians The barbarians are attacked by a monster and lose the ability to use their weapons. Monsters The monster has a hideous face and is five times bigger than the average human. Ravnica City Ravnica City, whose name is the dark capital, is the city that was not even constructed

But sometimes, when you're not paying attention, your brain makes you forget something. And it might surprise you. A study out of UCLA this week finds that the brain's visual cortex is surprisingly flexible. To begin with, the visual cortex, which is responsible for processing information about our senses, is no longer serving its original purpose: After we become adults, the visual cortex's job is to store memories. "Everyone thinks that it's hardwired," says Linda Andrews, a researcher at the University of Oregon who is not involved with the study. But it turns out that the visual cortex of the brain can change and adapt to form new memories. To test this concept, researchers captured glimpses of images on the brains of healthy 20 to 80-year-old adults. Next, they exposed some of these subjects to the same images 30 to 80 minutes later. These images were once again captured. The team found that the visual cortex made around three to four new connections every second. One surprising result: The brain seemed to be able to form some form of new memories even without being "aware" that it was remembering anything. This was confirmed by the fact that people showed “no behavioral difference” when recalling an image they’d been shown and one they hadn’t. Andrews says this suggests that the brain may have a process it uses to create new memories without requiring our
