I have a large image (7439x3232 pixels) that I want to serve as a placeholder. The plugin Image Placeholder is not working, because the images I found on the Internet are not at the right size. I tried to scale the image myself, but it only shrinks in height, and leaves the width intact. How should I proceed? A: A Google search turned up an old example on the Gimp wiki that involves cropping the image to the maximum width. After cropping, the placeholder is placed at the centre (0,0). You can select it by Ctrl+clicking. A: You can achieve this with Image-Placeholder. The image size should be the same as the original image (converting the image to a grayscale, if the size is wrong). As I mentioned in the comments, you can use the "Scaled" view before cropping. Now, the Image-Placeholder will take care of the cropping and the result will be the same as if the image was already there. Q: Do I need to use one C# httpclient library or several? I'm not very familiar with Asp.Net web services, so I am wondering is there any specific reason I would have to use one C# httpclient library (for example System.Net.Http) or should I use many? How does it differ, for example, if I connect to WCF? A: I have found

I have a setup like this: interface IInterface { void Test(); } class A : IInterface { void Test() { ... } } class B : A { void IInterface::Test() { ... } } class C : B { void IInterface::Test() { ... } } What I want is that in class C I want to override the implementation of Test in A without changing the code of class B. I'm thinking of a solution like this: interface IInterface { void Test(); } class A : IInterface { void Test() { ... } } class B : A { void IInterface::Test() { ... } } class C : B { void IInterface::Test() { ... } } But this seems a bit hacky and I want to avoid code 0cc13bf012
