An automotive vehicle brake system of the type in which a diaphragm type master brake cylinder is operatively connected to a master cylinder chamber and a diaphragm-type front wheel brake cylinder is operatively connected to a master cylinder chamber is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,236,834, for example. A diaphragm-type master brake cylinder is known as a pressure generating source of a hydraulic brake system for an automotive vehicle and a diaphragm-type front wheel brake cylinder is known as a pressure generating source of the hydraulic brake system. The pressure generating source is operatively connected to one of a plurality of wheel brakes at a rear wheel side and the one of the plurality of wheel brakes is subjected to a control. A system control is performed based upon operating conditions of the automotive vehicle. The control is performed in such a manner that wheel-driving forces of all the wheels are held at a predetermined relationship between a brake pedal force and a wheel-driving torque so as to maintain a proper vehicle behavior. It is known that a vehicle vibration occurs when wheel-driving forces of all the wheels are not equal to each other because an over
