We evaluated the cytotoxicity of different cancer drugs against myeloid leukemia K562 and prostate tumor DU145 cells, utilizing three different bioassays. We found that different drugs had different effects on the viability of these cell lines when evaluated by the MTT assay, the crystal violet (CV) assay and the CyQuant assay. The results indicated that a stronger effect on cell viability was detected when the drug was added to the cells immediately after cell seeding, than when the drugs were added to the cells 2 h later. For example, when the drugs were added immediately after cell seeding, the cell viabilities of K562 cells were significantly inhibited by doxorubicin, while the cell viabilities of these K562 cells were not affected by doxorubicin, when the drugs were added 2 h after cell seeding. Moreover, doxorubicin showed no effect on the viability of DU145 cells when the cells were cultured in the presence of the drug for 48 h, but when the drug was added to the cells immediately after cell seeding, the cell 6d1f23a050
