Check out their website for more: I am thrilled to have found your site and I'm sorry you had such a negative experience. I believe if you play the game with an open mind and show interest in your opponent, you will do well. I have just recently started playing and have started reading other players advice but have heard that I need to try it all out for myself, so thank you for not just hopping on the bandwagon with everyone else. First of all thank you for your comments! I really enjoy playing chess, but I have rarely encountered a group of players that I would call a "clique" or "tribe" and so I am glad to be in a place where I can make new friends and get new ideas. I have a small experience at chess, but it is all online chess where my opponents are random people from the internet. I have only won 1 game in my online chess career, but I think it was all about executing a strategy successfully. Playing online chess has strengthened my ability to analyze games. I did try out playing my first tournament, but I just didn't feel that I improved at all. I also noticed that my opponents were not very nice to me at all and actually insulted me. The reason was that I didn't have a chess program that showed the hands of the other players and my opponent always saw my hand before I could see theirs. So I lost lots of games from people who didn't know my moves. This is quite common, I only thought about this after I had just lost. I have played online chess for more than 5 years and have never had this problem with my opponents, but I guess some of them have developed a "clique". I had the same experience in the Zugspiel and English tournament and was really disappointed, but luckily I met some nice and intelligent people on the French forum and there were some good news to be announced. c6a93da74d
